The Kiln Drying Process

Kiln Drying Process

The (kiln-drying) movement was initially challenged by skeptics who claimed that moisture could be removed from the external sapwood of a tree, but not from deep inside the heart of the timber. But thanks to a few kiln-drying pioneers in the log home industry, those initial assumptions are beginning to change.

The process of kiln-drying lumber is the science of carefully controlling the extraction of moisture from wood at a rate that will not cause damage to the wood. When drying large dimensional lumber, a stack of “cants” is placed in a sealed building with the equipment necessary to control the drying conditions for the wood. These conditions are the same for air drying lumber — air movement temperature and humidity. Once the materials are in the kiln, the temperature is slowly raised to an eventual level of 170° degrees F. Heated air is used primarily to speed up the evaporation of the moisture in the wood.

Large, reversible fans circulate the heated air and change the direction of air flow at regular intervals to help maintain a consistent drying rate throughout the kiln. The moisture laden air is removed from the kiln by way of an automatic ventilation system and large dehumidifiers. The drying rate of the timbers is carefully monitored because the outside surfaces of the cants naturally dry faster than the centers. If this is continued in an uncontrolled fashion, severe checking (cracks in the lumber) would ultimately occur. So, surface moisture is maintained, thus equalizing the moisture throughout the wood.

Science Not Guess Work

(Kiln-drying) is not a random act of loading timber into a kiln, and coming back some later time to retrieve the wood. (The kiln-drying) schedule outlines the steps that should be taken to bring the logs down to the desired average moisture content of 19% percent or better without damage. During the drying process, moisture content is measured and the kiln schedule can be modified as required. After the cants are removed from the kiln, they are ready to be milled into wall logs. It is important to understand how measurements are taken. The most accurate measure is the “over-dry-ratio”. This is done by taking random cross sections of logs, weighing them, and then drying them down completely in a small oven. The ratio between the original kiln-dried weight and the final oven-dried weight represents the moisture content of the timber inside and out.

Why Kiln-Drying?

- First, it produces logs that are more uniform and dimensionally stable.
- Second, timbers are sanitized when they are heated to 170° F; in a kiln. Such heat kills mold, wood decay, fungi, and any insects, their eggs' larvae.
- Third, pitch in the woods is crystallized by the heat of the kiln. This prevents the sticky substance from seeping through the logs.
- Fourth, more than 10,000 pounds of water can be removed from a typical log home during the kiln-drying process. This significantly reduces weight for both shipping and handling on the work site.
- Fifth, & Finally, interior and exterior finishes can be applied immediately after construction and applications tend to penetrate deeper and last longer in kiln-dried timbers.

To Receive Jesus as Lord and Savior !

Father, it is written in your Word that if I confess with my mouth that Jesus is Lord and believe in my heart that you God have raised Him (Jesus) from the dead, I shall be saved. Therefore, Father, I confess that Jesus is my Lord and Savior. I make Him Lord of my life right now. I believe in my heart that you raised Jesus from the dead. I renounce my past life with Satan and lose the door to any of his devices.

I thank You for forgiving me of all my sin. Jesus is my Lord, and I am a new creation. Old things have passed away. Now all things become new in Jesus' name.
Amen

Therefore, I believe in the name of Jesus the Anointed One that all my needs are met, according to Philippians 4:19. For with the measure I deal out, It will be measured back to me.

Father God, You have delivered me put of the authority of darkness into the Kingdom of Your dear Son. Father God, I have taken my place as your child.
